Donna M. Silva Garcia, SDSCPA and FOSCPA Liaison based institutions during COVID, the hands-on learning experience has been replaced and moved to behind a computer screen.

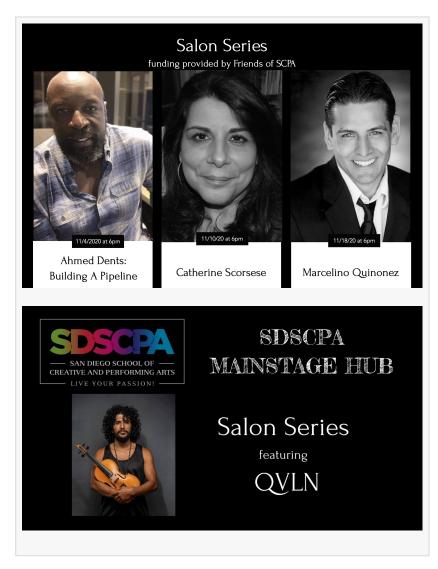

The school has recently launched SDSCPA Maintstage Hub and their new series, Salon Series and the College and Conservatory, for a way to bring artists together online while all in-person events have been placed on pause. The Mainstage Hub is a one-stop information center for all things arts at the school. Students, parents, and artists can access daily event calendars, get the latest admin alerts, plus get access to a college directory with deans, reps, and top post-secondary institutions.

The Hub also includes a new Salon Series, where attendees can hear from some of the nation's finest artists and performers in the industry. In each episode, listeners will get the chance to hear an artist's story and personal experience in the industry, how they are overcoming the effects of COVID-19, and engage in conversations about future changes to the arts post-pandemic. The other series, College and Conservatory, is organized similarly to the Salon series. The difference being the guest speakers now include conversations with admissions and recruitment offices of renowned arts programs from post-secondary institutions across the nation.

The typical in-person school site visits and regional college fairs created opportunities for students to learn about different Arts programs, meet department staff, and understand the campus culture. As a result of the pandemic, school site visits have been suspended and college fairs are now virtual. The SDSCPA Mainstage Hub College & Conservatory series is a forum where students can meet and chat directly online with conservatory and university representatives. Students can ask questions and learn about the admission process, deadlines, scholarships, tips and suggestions included! Students have the ability to talk with, and learn about more schools where location and distance otherwise made it difficult. Despite the pandemic, technology is being used to overcome obstacles and students now have a new means to get connected.

Due to the pandemic, the school remains closed. No events, performances, or exhibitions have been scheduled. The Mainstage Hub is the means to connect students and their families to the arts online. SDSCPA Maintage Hub sets an outstanding example of outsourcing technology in order to stay tied to the people affiliated with the program

The Salon Series is a place for artists and experts to join in from across the country and share their story. It's an opportunity for the arts community to dive into controversial issues, obstacles, and successes in the industry, bringing more awareness to their listeners. Attendees are encouraged to RSVP prior to attending the event. Each confirmed RSVP receives a reminder email and a direct link on the day of the online event. These events are typically held on Wednesday evenings at 6:00 p.m. and include a live chat for engagement.

These events are made possible by the charitable organization, Friends of SCPA, and its donors. There is no charge to attend these events and is open to the general public.

Prior to COVID, the school was using Purplepass for all their performances and events. Moving forward and transitioning to online events, they are now utilizing the Purplepass management software for collecting RSVP tickets to their new series. The SDSCPA can also forward event reminders and alerts to attendees, as well as direct links to online events sent via email or text. Purplepass gives them the ability to customize every aspect of their online event, including the electronic receipt sent after a purchase or for an RSVP. Each receipt includes SDSCPA's logo and a special message thanking their guests for the support.
