The Remote Learning Cubby helps set up your child to succeed while learning from home.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, November 9, 2020 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Last spring, when 55 million U.S. students were flung into remote learning, and schools were closing faster than dominoes toppling, many parents did their best to cobble together a makeshift classroom at the kitchen table.

An old laptop. Hand-me-down headphones. Broken Crayolas.

Now, as many states extend remote learning into 2021, it's arguably worth the investment in the tools your children need to stay engaged with their classmates and curriculum. While you need not devote a home office to remote learning, some dedicated space within parental view helps. And we know work environments matter.

Studies involving children show that their physical environment can profoundly influence learning.

Made in the USA, The Remote Learning Cubby brings the classroom feel to your home. This cubby is perfect for preschoolers, kindergartners, first-graders, and second graders. The interactive reference board allows students to personalize their learning space while providing the necessities to be a successful learner at home.

Remote Learning Cubby was created to help parents, students, and teachers during our new reality of COVID-19 remote learning. As a former special education teacher, mom, and CEO of Wheelhouse Graphix, an interior and exterior décor and signage company, Shauna realized how important the environment is around you to be successful.

Many companies that Wheelhouse Graphix has partnered with have found value in growing their culture. This helps companies' morale and productivity for employees, so why not for parents, students, and teachers. Realizing staying productive and focused during remote learning would be difficult for parents and students. They decided to create a designated space that students could call their own and find success in a distraction-free zone. Wheelhouse Graphix wanted to bring the classroom to the student. We are so excited to share this product with you, and we hope it helps make learning from home easier for everyone.
