

HEALIX SENTINEL ENABLES BUSINESSES TO GET PEOPLE MOVING AGAIN

Integrated range of security and risk management solutions gives risk managers peace of mind for international operations

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM,
November 17, 2020 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- Recent research by the Institute of Travel Management found that 38% of corporate travel managers expect their firm's travel plans and budgets for 2021 to be down by 25% to 50% compared to 2019.

However, for many organisations that operate on an international footprint there is an imperative to get employees moving again, and for expat workers to be located abroad. And with this requirement comes all the usual risks – as well as COVID-19.

In response, Healix International, the security and health risk management business has developed a new suite of tools to give risk managers vital control to meet their duty-of-care obligations. Healix Sentinel brings together five solutions to provide global organisations with vital tools to stay informed of the risks their employees and operations may face, and take appropriate action wherever they are across the globe.

Excessive risk management programmes can be burdensome and costly, while inadequate cover leaves an organisation vulnerable to operational disruption, reputational damage and potential litigation.”

Mike Webb, CEO, Healix International

“Whether it is risk associated with COVID-19, or a country's political landscape, we understand the importance of balance,” explained Mike Webb, CEO of Healix International. “Excessive risk management programmes can be burdensome and costly, while inadequate cover leaves an organisation vulnerable to operational disruption, reputational damage and potential litigation.”

services goes beyond the traditional travel risk space to focus instead on 'people' risk management, whether they are travelling or not. Another refreshing way the Sentinel platform stands out is the way the client risk manager – rather than the employee – is seen as the primary stakeholder. As Mike Webb adds; "Often the client only has a small team, or a single individual, responsible for risk mitigation. That's a heavy burden. The Sentinel platform addresses that by making their lives easier and acting as a force multiplier."

Risk managers can tailor Healix Sentinel to fit their own specific requirements, choosing the mix of services that will complement and support existing security resources. Alternatively, Healix International can provide a fully managed 24/7 'virtual' security department, delivering timely, actionable intelligence using cutting-edge technology to provide location specific insights and monitoring of incidents. In doing so, it gives risk managers peace of mind that they are providing employees with the highest level of duty-of-care.

"Our holistic approach encompasses planning, preparing and taking appropriate action as and when required. By providing a solution scalable to specific needs, this new suite of offerings allows risk managers to capitalise on opportunities in challenging environments within their own risk parameters," concluded Mike Webb.

"As well as helping tackle an organisation's risk management concerns and giving peace of mind, Healix Sentinel helps an organisation maintain a competitive advantage and will enhance its reputation as a secure and compliant organisation."
