Overview

The global energy management system market size is expected to reach USD 117.83 billion by 2026, according to this study, expanding at a CAGR of 17.1% during the forecast period. Technologically-updated business expansion initiatives such as smart cities are expected to fuel the energy management system (EMS) market growth. Selecting the right vendor is crucial for implementing and monitoring EMS solutions. Installing individual energy meters in problem areas and creating an interactive communication program among end users are likely to further lead to enhanced monitoring of the transmitted data.

Typically, an EMS includes devices, sensors, and meters that measure and monitor energy consumption and other factors related to them. These devices then transmit data over wireless network to a centrally-located server where an interactive application helps users in analyzing and optimizing information. Numerous EMS vendors provide hardware, software, and consulting support to keep the program running. Moreover, if the energy meters have the ability to operate on an open protocol, such as MODBUS, customers may not be dependent on any particular hardware or software vendor.
