Cancer doesn't stop, not even during a pandemic." "This partnership with Quick Quack Car Wash ensures we are able to continue our work to save lives during this unprecedented time."

Ashley DeGooyer Lee, Executive Director of the American Cancer Society faced physically and emotionally when traveling for his cancer treatments", said Frank Golda, Area Marketing Leader at Quick Quack Car Wash. "Which is why the Road to Recovery program is essential to help cancer patients and their families," he said.

Mr. Golda shared the need of transportation to and from medical treatments. He said, "A cancer diagnosis is lifealtering and frightening; cancer-related treatments are done on an outpatient basis daily or weekly over the course of several months. We want to support the cancerfighting efforts of these patients especially during these uncertain times."

Quick Quack Car Wash will be selling their top unlimited membership for $12 and donating a portion of the proceeds to the Road to Recovery program. Each location will also be collecting monetary donations for the American Cancer Society.

"Cancer doesn't stop, not even during a pandemic. The American Cancer Society remains committed to attacking cancer through 24-7 information, continuing research to find the best measures to fight cancer, and programs that help people with cancer in our community," said Ashley DeGooyer Lee, Executive Director of the American Cancer Society. "This partnership with Quick Quack Car Wash ensures we are able to continue our work to save lives during this unprecedented time."
