Joe Montaldo, CEO UPRN, commented, "I have researched Writers of the Future and found it to be everything they say they are and so am very excited to be supporting this program on a global scale." The Writers and Illustrators of the Future Podcast air each Monday at 4:00 pm (PST). As part of the syndication, the weekly show is loaded on the UPRN podcast page soundcloud.com/uprn as all earlier episodes are also being uploaded.

“Episode 100 is a very special show for us,” continued Goodwin, “as it features Toni Weiskopf, the publisher of Baen Books, one of America’s most significant publisher of science fiction and fantasy, and publisher of many of the Writers of the Future judges and past winners.”

The Writers and Illustrators of the Future Podcast was specifically created to provide hope and inspiration for aspiring writers and illustrators as per L. Ron Hubbard’s mission statement for the Writers & Illustrators of the Future contests. Podcast guests include Writers and Illustrators of the Future Contest judges, winners, and industry professionals who are able to bring their expertise and personal stories of achievement. "If you haven't listened to an episode yet, they are educational, funny, and totally geared for the aspiring writer and artist," Goodwin further noted.

Some of the past 100 guests on the Writer and Illustrators of the Future podcast include judges and industry professionals, such as Orson Scott Card, Tim Powers, David Farland, Robert J. Sawyer, Echo Chernik, Tom Doherty, Toni Weisskopf, Nancy Kress, Craig Elliott, Larry Elmore, Larry Niven, Nnedi Okorafor, Bea Jackson, Kevin J. Anderson, and Sean Williams.

For 37 years, over 800 winners, and now boasting entrants from over 175 countries, Writers and Illustrators of the Future have been providing "a means for new and budding writers to have a chance for their creative efforts to be seen and acknowledged" as per L. Ron Hubbard's direction.
