Dr. Munavvar Izhar Discusses the Role of Virtual Learning in Medicine Right Now

Dr. Munavvar Izhar knows that technology has changed the way medical education is done. Students are learning a lot from home these days. There are virtual lectures and training sessions by authorities in the field. For example, being a specialist in a particular topic holds a lecture online from California, which the students all over the country listen to at the same time. This brings in the delivery of high quality, uniform knowledge. Exchange of ideas and clarification of doubts occur over a wide spectrum of people fostering better education. A cardiothoracic surgeon may be in Johannesburg in South Africa and will be doing robotic surgery in the surgical suites at Northwestern University in Chicago. Munawar Izhar Discusses the Role of the COVID-19 Pandemic on the Education of Students
Another major event that is happening right now is the pandemic. Dr. Munawar Izhar understands that the pandemic has impacted the ability of students to enter the hospital and learn the material they need to be doctors. It is important for students to make sure they understand how to protect themselves and how they can keep up with the demands of their education even during the pandemic. Munawar Izhar encourages students to be technologically savvy and achieve the same or better education as they were before and still stay safe during these Covid times.

Munawar Izhar Discusses the Continuing Burden of the Cost of Medical Education
Finally, it is also important to talk about the burden of medical education. Munawar Izhar knows that it is incredibly expensive for students to go to medical school. It is not unusual to see students who are graduating with more than $300,000 in debt. When this is combined with the many years of residency with menial pay, it is easy to see how students are going to have trouble paying this money back. Dr. Munawar Izhar wants new and emerging physicians to know that there are options available. For example, students could decide to pursue something called Public Service Loan Forgiveness, or PSLF, which can help students tackle their debt quickly. Working in certain sectors and underserved areas also helps with loan forgiveness and yet at the same time gives them broader depth of health care provision. Keeping the expenses low and saving money goes a long way in paying off the debt sooner rather than later. Mindful investing and getting educated about finance also is a way to generate more wealth sooner to pay off the debts. "Living within the means and saving more tends to make more physicians millionaires than them trying to earn more."
