Business customers are increasingly focused on cost, quality, and environmentalism as they deal with outsourcing their linen service needs.

“Many businesses remain open, but 2020 has been anything but easy. Restaurants and hotels, for instance, are constantly searching for simple cost-cutting tactics that don’t negatively impact customer service quality or the environment,” explained Plato Spilios, Co-President at Crown. “We have a strategy that could help. Our post explores the value of leasing linens vs. buying — and all the downstream issues.”

OUTSOURCED LINEN SERVICES BRING BUDGET-RELIEF TO STRESSED BUSINESSES

Shutdowns and shelter-in-place rules created financial hardship for many businesses across New England. From Massachusetts to Connecticut, New Hampshire to Rhode Island, and Vermont to Maine, New England business owners have worked hard to follow federal and state guidelines. Many of these businesses suffered a direct financial impact as a result, and cost concerns are paramount going into 2021. As businesses look forward to 2021, their primary focus may be the cost advantages of a commercial linen service. However, they still desire high quality products, excellent service, and sustainable business practices. Crown Linen's new blog post addresses these commercial linen issues.
