This two bedroom, two bathroom luxury residence at the Ritz Carlton, Bachelor Gulch was scheduled to go to auction on January 11th, but sold prior to the auction date. After sitting on the market since April 2018, the sellers decided to partner with Interluxe. Interluxe provides an innovative way of marketing properties and a wider reach of qualified buyers. After less than 30 days of an Interluxe marketing campaign, this condo received a tremendous amount of attention and an offer that the sellers couldn't turn down. The listing agents, Gil Fancher and Ted Steers of the Vail Real Estate Center, were ecstatic about collaborating in another successful Interluxe sale and quick commission.

In the past, to some, it was unusual to see these types of luxury properties being offered for auction. Interluxe President, Scott Kirk, says "raised eyebrows for property auctions are less frequent these days as Interluxe's online auction format has proven its success over the last several years and more luxury home sellers are choosing to take control of their sale." "High end properties used to sit on the market for years waiting for a buyer," he says. "Auctions widen the pool of candidates, making it easier to make the sale. Interluxe has taken the auction concept the next step into the future by pioneering an online auction platform. By allowing people to bid from anywhere in the world, it brings in more bids, gets the seller more competitive pricing and makes the whole auction process more convenient and transparent for everyone" Kirk added.

Both agents chose to work with Interluxe after being involved in previous successful sales utilizing the platform and because of their 20 years of history of selling luxury homes in the Vail Valley. "They have produced a lot of happy sellers and buyers here, and that's what I want for my seller" said Ted Steers of Vail Real Estate Center.
