CYPRESS, TEXAS, UNITED STATES, February 12, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Indoor air quality is more important than ever before, as many companies begin to slowly open for business while some residents continue to stay at home as much as possible, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. As COVID-19, or the coronavirus as it's commonly called, is spread mostly through person-to-person contact via airborne droplets, proper air filtration at home, in the office, and in businesses open to the public is vital for reducing everyone's contagion risk.

Superior AC Repair Cypress has responded to this worldwide pandemic by dedicating themselves to educating clients and Texas residents on what's needed to stay safe while indoors. After starting their Cypress HVAC installation and repair business some 20 years, the team at Superior AC Repair Cypress knew that proper air quality in Cypress, TX, was vital, but never would have imagined the importance it would take on in recent months!

So what is needed to keep your surroundings safe during these uncertain times? The pros at Superior AC Repair Cypress suggest following CDC guidelines on mask-wearing and social distancing, as well as ensuring common areas and surfaces are cleaned and sanitized regularly throughout the day. Items handled by the public need added cleaning; this would include credit card machines, store counters, shopping baskets, and entryway door handles.

In addition to these standard guidelines, Superior AC Repair Cypress also strongly suggests a range of services designed to keep interior environments and indoor air quality safe and hygienic. They emphasize that regular HVAC maintenance in Cypress, TX, does more than keeping a furnace and AC running. When Superior AC Repair Cypress provides maintenance calls for their customers, they include a thorough HVAC cleaning, removing dirt and debris clinging to fan blades and blowers, as well as a filter change.

How does HVAC maintenance in Cypress, TX, keep your environment safe and improve air quality? As the pros at Superior AC Repair Cypress explain, property owners often fail to realize that a furnace and air conditioner both pull air from interior rooms, through the furnace filter and then across heating or cooling coils before it's circulated back into interior spaces.

That filter helps trap and lock dirt and airborne debris. HEPA and other high-quality filters can even trap allergens and airborne irritants. While there is still much to be learned about the coronavirus, that strong, clean filter in your HVAC system may very well be trapping and eliminating the droplets that would otherwise spread the contagion.

Superior AC Repair Cypress not only recommends regular HVAC maintenance and cleaning, they also note the dangers of ignoring needed work and HVAC repairs, including filter changing. If that filter and appliances are neglected, circulated air easily picks up debris clinging to the filter and appliances and sends them right back into interior spaces! With over 20 years of experience in HVAC repairs and maintenance, Superior AC Repair Cypress has seen a wide range of debris clinging to HVAC appliances and their blowers, and they know that where there are dirt and dust, there are probably high levels of airborne bacteria and irritants.

To ensure their customers and neighbors are safe, Superior AC Repair Cypress also stresses the need for high-quality air filtration in Cypress, TX, structures. An air filtration system continuously circulates and filters air, even when the HVAC system isn't operating. A commercial-quality or whole house air filtration system in a Cypress TX structure also helps the HVAC systems work more efficiently, reducing wear and tear while improving indoor air quality!

In response to increased demands for filtration systems, Superior AC Repair Cypress offers a full range of high-quality air filters, designed to trap and lock more than just everyday dust and debris. They recommend HEPA and UV filters, designed to kill germs, bacteria, and other airborne contaminants and irritants, improving indoor air quality in Cypress TX instantly.

While professional HVAC maintenance in Cypress, TX, is vital for improving indoor air quality, the pros at Superior AC Repair Cypress also encourage homeowners and commercial property owners to change furnace filters themselves often, even every other week. Proper ventilation reduces the risk of trapping contagions including viruses inside a home or business, so homeowners and commercial property owners might consider keeping windows open as much as possible and using interior vents and fans throughout the day.

Superior AC Repair Cypress also stresses that they provide 24-hour emergency HVAC repair in Cypress, TX, with the fastest response times possible. With more residents sheltering in place and businesses needing to be extra cautious about indoor air quality, it's vital that a malfunctioning HVAC system get repaired as quickly as possible! Circulating air through the furnace is a vital component in keeping that air clean, while a comfortable environment also reduces stress and ensures homebound residents are as comfortable as possible.

As older HVAC systems might struggle to work efficiently, it's vital they're replaced as soon as needed, says the team at Superior AC Repair Cypress, to keep indoor air as clean and comfortable as possible. Older units can also seize up without notice, making it even more difficult to shelter in place and keep home-schooled children comfortable and attentive!
