

Does vengeance provide an evolutionary advantage? Dr. Deepak Chopra and Professor Don Hoffman weigh in

Tune in this Wednesday, February 17th, at 8am PT to Awake TV Network to watch live for free

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, February 16, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Season 2 Episode 5: "Conscious Realism: Is There A New Mathematics That Would Explain Evolution of Ecosystems?"

In this episode with Jennifer K. Hill, Dr. Deepak Chopra and Professor Don Hoffman, they explore the idea put forth in a recent New Scientist article which asserts: "Adapt first, mutate later."

Dr. Deepak Chopra and Professor Don Hoffman

Species seem to learn to adapt to their environment. This leads Chopra to ask: "Who or what is doing the adapting?" and suggests that from a spiritual or Eastern tradition standpoint, adaptation can only occur in consciousness.

The adaptation is not that of a single organism, but all of the whole biosphere, which contains the biological organism.”

Deepak Chopra

Chopra elaborates on the idea of adaptation not being just about the biological organism itself, but rather encompassing the whole biosphere. He provides examples of this entanglement, demonstrating that even small changes create chain effects for everything else.

Hoffman shares about evolutionary game theory, as detailed in his book, The Case Against Reality: Why Evolution Hid the Truth from Our Eyes. Hill enquires if this perspective could be applied to human beings competing for the same resources, and if so, how human beings can shift their behavior so that they too do not face extinction events at their own hands.
