“We believe, through the various oil and gas entities we’re creating or partnering, that private companies will be able to access capital as efficiently as public companies” said Thomas Harblin partner in the Entrex Oil and Gas Market. “Private companies can provide a simple royalty to the public entity – receiving capital –

while allowing investors the same cash-flow they receive in private transactions -- but they now can trade for capital appreciation – or sit back and enjoy the quarterly dividends”.

This unique solution is a win-win for private producers and investors. We’re hoping the first transaction of our $250,000,000 2021 goal should be finalized this quarter with institutional partners”

Rich French

Rich French, Business Development of the Entrex Oil and Gas Market suggests: “This unique solution is a win-win for both private producers and investors. We’re hoping the first transaction of our $250,000,000 2021 goal should be finalized this quarter with institutional cash-flow partners”.

“Private oil royalties are probably the simplest cash-flowing security to trade for private oil and gas producers – yet they are enormously inefficient for both the initial offering and secondary trading. We feel the public model we've created can establish a more efficient way for private companies to access capital through a public structured security – and could be a model to bring efficiency to other private sectors” said Stephen H. Watkins CEO of the Entrex Oil and Gas Market.
