In just under a year, our world has irreversibly changed. An invisible virus has ravaged the globe, devastating families and changing the way that humans have behaved since the dawn of time.

Yet despite these isolating and threatening circumstances, millions have come together to remind us that real change comes when we unite during difficult times. The time for peace, safety and equality for ALL people is right now.

“Peace Will Come” is an anthem of love, peace, equality, and hope. It has been viewed on the internet over 100,000 times, and has been heard on commercial, internet and public radio to great reviews. The song is the love child of native New Yorkers, Teddy Wender and Neil Rosengarden, co-produced by Chris “The Fourz” Brown. The result of decades of friendship and brotherhood that can only be sustained by empathy, acceptance, and ultimately love.

The song implores us to stand beside our brothers and help them out when they are down, and warns us that unless we show a little kindness, we’re setting up for our demise. An essential and pertinent message for our quickly evolving world.

“With the nation being at such crossroads, with over 600,000 deaths due to the pandemic, resulting in millions of jobs lost, and a dramatic rise in racial injustice not seen since the 60’s, political polarization is at an all-time high, peace, love and understanding is all we need now. It’s time to work together and this song says just that. Please join us to try to make a better world for our kids.”

- Ted Wender

Teddy continues to look forward and is currently in the studio readying his second single “Just Like A Soul Train” off the forthcoming album Theo. It’s a future classic, and with the COVID vaccine getting into the arms of people, and things beginning to open up, his hope is that people will hear this song and feel the urge to dance.
