This is the first time a Georgia homebuilder has received this coveted distinction.

"My Dad, Howard, would have turned 100 this year and would have been so proud to see what his company and family have accomplished since his founding of the company in 1948," said David Chatham, president of Chathambilt Homes.

Chathambilt is also a founding member of the Southern Living Custom Builder mentoring program which was established to drive diversity in the custom home building industry by providing opportunities and support to college students. The partnership is highlighted in the March issue of Southern Living.

On the heels of a record-setting year in 2020, Chathambilt Homes, the award-winning residential builder known for its legacy brand of Chatham family businesses, hit the ground running in 2021 with several projects pushing toward completion in Atlanta's northern arc.
