The rise in interest in lawn care and gardening activities among people during the COVID-19 outbreak is expected to drive the push lawn mowers market. People are turning towards lawn care and gardening for different reasons such as for keeping them busy, as a hobby, to obtain a sense of accomplishment, a way to reduce stress, and for access to fresh food. According to ScottsMiracle-Gro's survey released in June 2020, more than 55% of American adults are currently gardening or caring for their lawn during the COVID-19 outbreak. According to the Office for National Statistics survey, around 45% of Britons are coping with the lockdown by gardening. Lawn care and gardening activities require equipment such as push lawn mowers for cleaning the area by cutting the grass that enhances the image of the property. Thus, the high demand for gardening equipment is projected to propel the push lawn mowers market's growth.
