I'm excited to learn more, and share with the broader community, what Monetran has been developing”
Sam Conner - Host of the Sam Conner podcast

Monetran is a budding internet fintech company which management plans to develop into a universal payment provider. The company recently completed a sold-out quarter-million dollar SEC Regulation Crowdfunding offering. This came on the heels of Monetran's launch of its minimal viable product, or MVP. The MVP enables customers to buy, redeem, hold, transfer, or pay with the company's tokens, known as Monedas.

Monedas are stable tokens, which eliminates the volatility that most cryptocurrencies experience. They are backed 100% by interest bearing U.S. government securities, including Treasuries and municipal bonds. Also, they are designed to gradually increase in value, which makes them inflation resistant and enables them to serve as a true store of value.

The Monetran system is built on the Stellar blockchain. Stellar enables world-wide transactions which resolve in 3-5 seconds and cost a fraction of a cent each. This results in Monetran being able to make fast, inexpensive domestic and cross-border payments on a global scale.

Conner, who is an expert on Stellar and its distributed ledger technology, reflected on the organization's mission. "Stellar is paving the way in providing innovative vehicles for financial instruments, leading the way in digitizing securities, stablecoins and CBDCs," he said, adding, "I'm excited to learn more, and share with the broader community, what Monetran has been developing"

The management of Monetran has set its sights on the U.S to Mexico and Latin America remittance markets. Once fully operational, the company intends to compete in those markets, which account for $50 billion in transactions on an annual basis.

Monetran maintains a website from which tokens can be purchased and/or redeemed at www.monetran.com
