Diamonds are expensive, and that's no exception. Ethically sourced diamonds make excellent stones for engagement rings. Responsibly extracted diamonds follow humanitarian practices.

Diamonds found on the riverbed and inside mines are the purest stones. Diamonds undergo various processes after extraction. Even ethically extracted diamonds are at the risk of adulteration at later stages. A consumer should be aware of this before buying diamonds.

Every diamond engagement ring comes with a grading certificate issued by a reputed organization like Gemological Institute of America (GIA). The certificate enlists all the details about the stone. However, the easiest way to examine an engagement ring's purity is through the 4Cs- Clarity, cut, carat, and color.

Most consumers are more concerned about the center diamond than any other aspect of the ring. Yes, the center diamond is important, but the ring style is equally important. The ring style should match your style and personality. It makes a huge difference.
