

Ex-GameFly Co-Founder on why he left GameFly, Founded DropOff and why he plays in the World Series of Poker

Long Shot Leaders Podcast talks with Co-Founder of GameFly and how he had to overcome diversity and defy the odds and rise to become ultra-successful.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, USA, March 15, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Austin, Texas, March 15, 2021, In these trying times as the COVID-19 Pandemic wreaks havoc on the economy and people's personal and business lives, some businesses have thrived, like DropOff, a Same-Day Delivery and Custom Logistics Solution started by GameFly Ex Co-Founder Sean Spector. GameFly is an online video game rental subscription service that specializes in providing games for game consoles and handheld game consoles.

Sean Spector Co-Founder of GameFly

Competing in the World Series of Poker is just like a business”

Sean Spector

Spector says he started both of the companies in bear markets but they still found success. GameFly after the dot com burst and DropOff with the Covid-19 pandemic lockdown. After GameFly Spector started DropOff, a Same-Day Delivery, and Custom Logistics Solution.

“Long Shot Leaders” Podcast featuring ultra-successful people that were not given success on a silver platter. Quite the contrary, their stories will not only amaze listeners but also inspire them.

During a recent interview, Sean Spector, Co-Founder of Gamy Fly and DropOff, shares part of his background story, “I have always loved video games, since the days Atari was invented”. “My dad died when I was still relatively young and I started GameFly after he died”. It would have been nice for my dad to see some of my success”.

Spector goes on to say, “I love to play Poker so much so I get high up in the ranks at the World Series of Poker. It’s like a business. But that’s what I like, that, and traveling with my wife (his college sweetheart), watching my two daughters play competitive sports and ride horses. Spector also talks about how to get venture capital funding. Sean's story and interview are on the Long Shot Leaders Podcast website.”
