

Arthritis National Research Foundation Announces Emily Boyd Stormoen as New Chief Executive Officer

IRVINE, CA, UNITED STATES, March 20, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Arthritis National Research Foundation (ANRF) is proud to welcome Emily Boyd Stormoen as the organization's new Chief Executive Officer. Emily brings with her more than 20 years of progressive experience working in the nonprofit sector as a senior executive leader, focusing on business development, strategic planning, and revenue generation.

"Emily is the visionary, action-oriented leader ANRF needs to navigate this Foundation into the future. Her extensive nonprofit experience, proven track record of developing high performing teams and genuine interest in finding cures for Arthritis make her the ideal CEO," said Schalon Newton, DBA, Chair of the ANRF Board of Directors. "The board is proud of what ANRF has achieved since 1970 but we also recognize that the need for private funding of research has never been greater. We have every confidence that Emily will lead the Foundation forward to support an expanding portfolio of research to increase the chance that we can identify new therapies and ultimately cures."

Emily Boyd Stormoen previously served as Chief Revenue Officer (CRO) for the National Psoriasis Foundation (NPF). Under her leadership, NPF's portfolio hit new revenue highs and set gift records. Prior to her tenure as CRO, Emily served as the Vice President of Strategic Alliances and Medical Affairs and Director of Medical Programs at NPF. Before NPF, Emily worked at the Oregon Medical Association where she oversaw medical education and program development. A keynote speaker at local and national events, Emily also serves on the Chief Development Officer Affinity Committee for the National Health Council, where she helps identify emerging trends and solutions to challenges facing NHC members.
