The post explains that vacation crowds mean more car and trucking accidents in South Padre Island. The post explains that the problem that a driver might have when a person is injured in a car wreck that was not the driver's fault is that they have to claim damages from the insurance company for the driver at fault. Insurance companies do not like paying out claims. It's logical really, because the less they pay out, the more profit they make, and that is why they are very happy to pay aggressive lawyers for the sole purpose of delaying things and ultimately reducing the amount that they have to pay to the absolute minimum. They also employ what are euphemistically known as “loss adjusters”. Not all insurance companies are overly aggressive, but in many cases the best first step is to reach out to a personal injury lawyer in or near Brownsville, South Padre Island, or elsewhere in the Rio Grande Valley for a consultation.

Even more importantly, Spanish-speaking clients can check out the Spanish information page at <https://jvlawfirm.net/se-habla-espanol/>. In addition to this new content focused on South Padre Island, the law firm is excited to announce its McAllen-area website at <https://jvlawfirmmcallen.com/>. With a population of 141,000, McAllen is just behind Brownsville as a population center in the Rio Grande Valley. Like South Padre Island, McAllen has more than its share of trucking accidents. The new site helps persons who have had an accident to research accident lawyers and potentially reach out for an engagement whatever their location: Brownsville, South Padre Island, or McAllen.

INCREASING TRAFFIC MEANS INCREASING ACCIDENTS
