Five years on from the death of her friend and almost seven years on from the creation of Robert Burns The Musical, Tish is more convinced than ever before that she will never give up on the project.

“Michael was a genius; Robert was a genius and there are far more similarities there than Thriller and Tam ‘o’ Shanter. David knew that, he saw the potential of a project like this and that’s why he handed it to me. He was a genius in the art of the hustle and the fact that I am relatively unknown is both bizarre and brilliant!”

The Scottish performer believes that a documentary currently in development in America will finally provide an international platform for the Scottish Show with a Hollywood History. “The older I get, the more I believe that everything happens for a reason. This musical was always meant to be, and it was always meant to be passed down to me – and as bizarre as that sounds...it’s the truth!”
