The pain management devices and therapies market consist of sales of pain management devices and therapies to manage chronic and critical pain in patients suffering from various conditions, such as cancer and neurological disorder. This market includes the sales of light-based devices, TENS (transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulation) for home, and other devices mainly used for Spinal cord stimulation, sacral nerve stimulators and deep brain stimulation.

Companies in the pain management devices and therapies industry are focusing on the use of advanced technologies to cure chronic and acute pain without the use of any opioids (drugs). Special pain relief wearable devices are being developed by several companies that can be controlled manually or through a smartphone. These devices work by gathering neural pulses from the brain which triggers the release of the body's natural pain blocker. Thus, the devices electrically stimulate the nervous system and increase body's resistance to pain.
