Pittsburgh/Los Angeles based artist georgiaxe returns with a new single "i don't feel". The single marks a new chapter for the singer who's goal in music is to "bring positivity to people through honesty and starting discussions about subjects that have traditionally been taboo is a great way to do that and connect on a deeper level"

The pop trap track features georgiaxe's signature pop-leaning vocal propelled along by rhythmic trap production. georgiaxe makes her presence known in pop trap realm. It follows her recent features in the New York Weekly, and Women of Substance Podcast, The American Reporter, among others.

"I don't feel " opens with a silky vocal echoing the hook melody singing " I don't feel, I don't feel no " The phrase repeats, and rhythmic high hats and signature trap production set the tone. The hook cascades into a rhythmic verse "I been trippin, I been sippin.." gracefully teetering the line between rapping and singing. The hook comes back in the deep bass complemented by the airy melodic falsetto. georgiaxe elaborates on the message behind the track:

"I wrote i don't feel in Los Angeles. Being young, single, in LA there's this glorification of how you're supposed to feel, having this great time. I suffer from anxiety, and felt like I was always trying to keep up to this ideal that I had created for myself. This track is really just saying, I'm living this great life, but it's numb in a way. That's not really what's important in life, it's loving and being loved."
