When parents start teaching their children at an early age about the value of money, this life lesson benefits the entire family 18 years later!”

Children grow up so fast, and teaching them the value of money often gets overlooked because we do not know how, when, or what to do. Unfortunately, in hindsight, parents regret not teaching their kids this critical life lesson of money management.

According to Forbes, "T. Rowe Price's 11th Annual Parents, Kids & Money Survey found that nearly half of parents said they miss opportunities to talk to their kids about money and finances. And a quarter said they are very reluctant or highly reluctant to discuss financial topics with their children. Kids, on the other hand, are eager for their parents to share their wisdom. Half of the children surveyed said they wish their parents taught them more about money. Even if you're not teaching your kids, they will learn lessons about money one way or another. If you want to play a vital role in shaping your children's feelings, thinking, and values about money, you need to give them the gift of financial literacy from an early age." Piggy Bank Tutor partners with parents providing fun family time financial literacy engagement!
