Athena dared to follow her dream and as she remembers vividly a good lesson she learned about writing is to just write everything and anything in your mind and heart. The one rule was that you write without self-correcting, looking back, or even stopping, just write until you are done saying what you want to say.

Final Thoughts

Most authors and writers have the richest memories, deepest thoughts, creative minds, and extensive experiences that they share with their readers. Athena Goodman belongs in that category as her stories come from her heart or her own experiences.

Writing what you know is a good place, to begin with, but one's interaction with other people adds to life's enrichment and countless stories that could be written and impact and touch the lives of as many people as possible.
