

Bren-Tronics, Inc. Awarded Conformal Wearable Battery (CWB) Manufacturing Contract by U.S. Army

Long Island, New York-based Reliable Rechargeable Battery Maker Meets Next Generation Power Demands of the U.S. Army

COMMACK, NY, US, May 14, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Today's modern warriors require rugged lightweight gear to support them in any environment. This includes a power source for warfighters' critical navigation, communications, and combat equipment. The Conformal Wearable Battery (CWB) meets that need. Bren-Tronics, Inc. is the only small business among the four awardees for the $1.25 Billion Indefinite Delivery / Indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) contract to manufacture the CWB by the U.S. Army Contracting Command, Aberdeen Proving Ground. The Bren-Tronics, Inc. CWB is the result of years of development and lessons learned from our existing wearable soldier power products, including batteries, chargers, and accessories. More information about Bren-Tronics and its reliable rechargeable power products is available at <https://www.bren-tronics.com>.

Soldier power demands have continually increased, requiring centralized, rugged and wearable power solutions,”

Doug Petito, Senior Vice President, Bren-Tronics, Inc.

The Conformal Wearable Battery (CWB) is a centralized energy source that will power the Nett Warrior (NW) suite of electronic devices – an integrated Situational Awareness (SA) system used during combat operations, including the Integrated Visual Augmentation System (IVAS) from Microsoft, and Next Generation Squad Weapons (NGSW).

The Bren-Tronics, Inc. CWB is compliant to the exacting MIL-PRF-32383/4X specification.
