Having a night to remember while giving to a great cause is a wonderful feeling”

The South Florida native, a willful progeny of Italian parents from New York, grew up near the sunny beaches of Boca Raton – with notorious gangsters as family friends. “My dad was a real mobster, a bookie who owned restaurants and race horses... he fled the Feds as a fugitive,” said Sidoti. “My mom was the loyal Sicilian housewife and my godfather

Johnny ‘Sideburns’ Cerrella was the acting capo of the Lucchese organized crime family.

Sidoti gained notoriety in the ‘90s when she appeared on The Howard Stern Show as Stuttering Nina the Hot Dog Girl. Playboy Magazine heard her interview and was so impressed that they invited her for a test shoot. Her big break came when New Rave Magazine featured her in an eye-popping pictorial layout.

Adult film beckoned, so in 2001 Sidoti gave herself the ‘nom de porn’ Nina Dolci and shot films for hardcore studios Jill Kelly Productions, Zero Tolerance and Reality Kings. Her career was sidelined in 2005 when she went to Federal prison for a decade on conspiracy drug charges. “I was heavy into partying and allowed it to consume and almost destroy my life,” Sidoti said.

Sidoti was finally released in 2015 and, a bit older and wiser, resumed shooting for the industry’s top studios. “Incarceration changed me completely for the better,” she said, adding that her comeback title for Brazzers was called, fittingly, Making Up for Lost Time

Now that Sidoti is “moving forward and believing in myself,” her personal life and career are flourishing. As a respected fitness expert in the Boca Raton community, she owns SAX Fitness, promoting a healthy, goal-oriented lifestyle, and she recently posed for the cover of Playboy New Zealand’s November 2019 issue and FHM South Africa January 2020 issue.
