What Is A Refurbished iPhone?

When looking to buy a “used” iPhone, it is vital to take note of how the iPhone is described. Some retailers will offer to sell used iPhones, while others sell refurbished iPhones.

When you buy a used phone, you are getting just that - a phone that another person has already used. Most used phones come “as-is,” meaning that you are getting a device that may be old, malfunctioning, or simply doesn't work. While you may end up with a great iPhone, a used phone purchase is always risky.

The term “refurbished iPhone” typically means that the device has been used by a previous owner and has been sent back to the company for repair or replacement. Often, refurbished iPhones are simply purchased and sent back without ever being opened. These phones - much like a car that has just left the lot - can no longer be sold at market price.

Are Refurbished iPhones Safe To Buy?

Most refurbished iPhones are certified to be factory-reset and updated to meet all necessary standards to be resold on the market. They will be checked, reset, and cleaned up to ensure that the iPhone is in complete working order - both hardware and software included.

To ensure that the refurbished iPhone is working at its total capacity, the company will run a variety of tests to diagnose any reported issues and make sure that the phone responds with high-quality Wi-Fi and cellular data. As an added bonus, most refurbishers will also update the iPhone with the latest iOS to ensure it's ready out of the package with the latest features.

The Benefits Of Buying A Refurbished iPhone

While a phone purchase is always best made by the consumer, knowing the benefits of a refurbished iPhone can help you make the best purchasing decision for you. Here are the top benefits of buying a refurbished iPhone:
