Daniel M Hurt is one of the most prominent proponents of the Universal Basic Income movement. However, many aren't familiar with the movement itself but may be familiar with the concept. Daniel M Hurt tries to educate most Americans on the benefits this action may provide and has devoted much of his free time to spreading the word and petitioning for support from both residents and those who have influence.

So, one may wonder why he's so adamant about supporting this cause. The answer is simple - he's a tech mogul who recognizes the impact Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Machine Learning (ML) will have on society. These technologies may soon replace much of the human workforce, and with that prospect comes problems with employment and income. Those concepts help ensure the average American can put food on the table and pay bills even if there's a shortage of jobs in some sectors.

Daniel M Hurt recognizes that many tech companies stand to make significant increases in business and volume using this technology, so it's definitely on the horizon. The best approach is a proactive one in preparations for new challenges faced in the workforce. Dan Hurt believes it would be a growing process with significant impacts on the average family.

He expects to see inflation in certain sectors related to supply and demand and a need for additional work-related roles, but not before a potential job shortage. His goal is to help protect Americans and their income with Universal Basic Income to allow time for adjustments and to re-establish themselves in the workforce in new ways. He feels now is the time to prepare for the future.
