To learn more about this type of service here are 4 Questions to ask a junk removal company prior the retaining their services. Junk removal services are a great resource for any business or homeowner when it's time to relocate; these companies can close the gap on how to deal with the junk that's being left behind at the place of residence or office. Here are some fundamental questions worth asking before hiring a junk removal service provider prior to a project.

1. What Type Of Junk Do They Take?

“We’ve built our business around respecting time and budgets of our clients. With dumpster rental and junk removal options, you can do it yourself or have the work done for you.” -Bernard Toney, CEO”

When it comes to junk removal, it is essential to ask the company what type of junk they do and do not haul away. It is important to discuss details with a hired company so it is a clean and clear agreement with the junk removal business owner.

2. What Do They Charge?

The charges and rates of junk removal services are also a significant piece of your hiring journey. It is important to choose a company that is priced according to the value presented on their website, on the call and in the agreement. Companies that are licensed, bonded, insured and skilled often demand a higher premium, but present less liability and higher chance of quality service for your project. In most circumstances, it is a better balance of time and money to hire an outside service. Cost for the travel and disposal should be included in the cost. Unless the project is going to extend across several days or trips, the price should be clear at one bulk rate unless otherwise discussed. Some variables can increase the cost of the project such as weight and accessibility.

3. How Large Of A Space Do They Have?

Another thing that is important to ask junk removal services is about the availability of space they have to haul away materials from a location. Junk removal services need to have a considerable amount of space to accommodate all materials that need to be disposed of, recycled or repurposed. If the company has a dumpster, that is often a more optimal solution depending on the project. If someone is thinking about a dumpster rental for a junk removal project, consider discussing it with the junk removal company to assist in the decision. If it is a good-sized project of 10 cubic yards or more whether it be a dumpster or a full-service, it is important to hire a company that has ample space, time and staff to handle the project.

4. Are They Licensed & Insured?

It cannot be emphasized enough that a junk removal company in Iowa, Illinois or any other state, needs to be licensed according to each state's set of guidelines. The company should have their license on hand (hard copy or digital), to verify at the time of service. There are many companies that scam people under the description of junk removal and other types of maintenance services. For safety and peace of mind, it is best to always hire professional companies that have required licensing and insurance.

Well, that is just a few questions to consider. It will vary of course with each project. These questions are commonly asked during the initial verbal or written contact of hiring a junk removal company.
