HO CHI MINH, VIETNAM, June 2, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Getting tattoos has been a unique and well-loved way for people of all ages to express themselves. ### How Does A Scarless Tattoo Removal Procedure Work?

Before finding the best scarless tattoo removal service at a spa in Ho Chi Minh city, it is essential to have a general idea of how the procedure works.

Recently, thanks to technical development, tattoo removal without leaving any scar on the body has never been easier and less painful. The main procedure in the treatment involves using a laser named Q-Switched Nd: YAG (or YAG).

Laser YAG is the latest system in this series of Q-Switched lasers and has proved to be the most potent weapon for removing tattoos.

It is also the most commonly used procedure all around the world and is highly appreciated by all the leading countries in this field, such as America and German.

This procedure has already had approval from the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) to meet all the conditions of safety and effectiveness for users.

So how does the YAN laser work to get rid of anybody and facial tattoo without creating any scars?

Firstly, let's take a look at how tattoos used to be removed. The only possible method is by creating a direct mechanical impact on the skin surface. In other words, it means the tattooed skin must be grinding away.

The tattoo ink will gradually fade away without any skin abrasion

The dermabrasion and calibration process will damage the skin surface and the skin tissues in the outermost layers. Therefore, the users will encounter lots of pain and inconvenience when using this method.

Without the need for surgical intervention, our techniques can rejuvenate skin and create a naturally youthful look."

On the other hand, the advanced Q-Switch YAN laser uses a light beam with such high intensity to remove the tattoo ink. With a relatively large wavelength ranging from 532 nm to 1064 nm, YAN technology will create a double effect on the treated skin area.

During the irradiation process, the pigments (another name for tattoo ink) accumulating under the skin layer will be absorbed by the wavelength depending on its color. The laser beam will then break the color links and dissect them into tiny particles.

Gradually, the natural elimination of the lymphatic system will dispose of your body of the ink fragments.

Things To Consider Post-Treatment

There are a few things that you should prepare yourself for after the treatment.

The Scarrings And The Pain

The main focus in any post-treatment process is pain and scarring. With the non-abrasive YAN technology, there will be no pain or scarring left after the treatment whatsoever.

The YAN light beam only emits short flashes (or pulses) of light each time. The pulses will gently get in contact with the skin, complete their task which is to break down the pigment colors, then go away.

For that reason, the skin won't have to go through any form of abrasive treatment that results in extreme pain and permanent scars.

However, some people still have post-treatment reactions. Some of the main symptoms are hyperpigmentation, bleeding, skin itching, and swelling. Most of them are considered normal and will naturally go away within a few weeks.

The Role Of The Laser Technician

Without skill and accurate control from dermatologists, even the most advanced, ground-breaking equipment will become completely useless. And laser equipment is a complex tool that can only be optimized in the hands of experienced, trained experts.

To operate the procedure on the patient, the technicians are required to have a deep understanding of the laser's mechanism, the patient's skin types, and the condition of the tattoo that needed removing.

Based on the above factors, the dermatologist will then determine an appropriate treatment approach for a specific patient. They will decide the wavelength setting, each pulse duration, the pulse type, the number of pulses, and the laser depth that works best for the patient's own skin and tattoo ink.

For that reason, choosing a trustworthy spa that has professional, trained and experienced technicians will largely affect the whole procedure.
