Once cracks start to develop, water will come into the home, making the problem even worse. It's best to repair these small cracks soon to prevent them from becoming structural hazards.”

Parapet stucco walls are exposed to all the elements. This makes them particularly vulnerable to monsoon season. Cracks in these parapet walls aren't just aesthetically displeasing, they can also result in water rushing into the home.

“Once cracks start to develop, water will come into the home, making the problem even worse. It's best to repair these small cracks as soon as you see them to prevent them from becoming structural hazards,” Julio Durazzo, Owner of Old Pueblo Stucco L.L.C. said.

The experts at Old Pueblo Stucco have over 30 years of experience repairing stucco and drywall. They have come up with a long term solution for cracks in parapet stucco walls. To fix cracks, they apply a high-strength, flexible, waterproof base coat with alkali resistant fiberglass mesh mixed in. This solution is designed to bond with stucco finishes and make it last longer with fewer cracks.

Those interested in beating the monsoon season and saving their stucco from further cracking can book an appointment for a free estimate with Old Pueblo Stucco L.L.C.
