Chief medical officer of the FLCCC appears on the Dark Horse Podcast—Says public health officials are limiting the ability of providers to manage the pandemic.

WASHINGTON, D.C., USA, June 3, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- On Tuesday, June 1, 2021, Pierre Kory, M.P.A., MD, president and chief medical officer of the FLCCC, appeared on the wildly popular Dark Horse podcast. He participated in an in-depth conversation with host Dr. Bret Weinstein on how governments and health authorities worldwide have mismanaged their responses to the COVID-19 pandemic. The discussion highlighted how governments have ignored the latest science on therapeutics for early treatment and prevention and followed biased misinformation that has prevented and discouraged clinicians from properly treating patients.

At 25:15, "...doctors have been forcibly demoted from scientific clinician to technician...You are delivering a prepackaged good rather than coming to understand your patient" said Brett Weinstein, MA, PhD., evolutionary biologist and host of the Dark Horse podcast.

The interview with Dr. Kory, which lasted over two and a half hours, included a detailed conversation about how numerous studies of the latest therapeutics show positive results in reducing COVID-19 cases in multiple regions across the world. However, authorities like the World Health Organization and the U.S. National Institutes of Health refuse to acknowledge these results based on criticisms and dismissal of the now over 24 randomized controlled trials. As a result, most governments implement policies of limited to no treatment whatsoever for COVID-19, preferring instead to wait for people to become vaccinated.

At 50:40, “the fact [is] that our public health agencies are basically limiting the choices and the treatments that they champion. They have failed their goal of protecting the health of citizens” said Pierre Kory, M.P.A., MD, president and chief medical officer of the FLCCC.
