The Tgeek was developed to enable people to carry around a single accessory to connect all their devices”

Mark Lu, Tgeek spokesperson

The team behind the Tgeek are excited to see where this product launch takes them. The team is based in San Diego, CA, and Hangzhou, China, with the product itself having been in development since November 2020.

Mark Lu, a company spokesperson for Tgeek said, "As tech guys ourselves, we felt the frustration of having to carry around multiple ports and adaptors just to get connected at work or at home. The Tgeek was developed in response to this, enabling people to carry around a single accessory to connect their devices. We're hoping people use it at work, at home, and anywhere else they need it; it's small and easy to carry around, so you can throw it in your bag or your pocket and know you're always ready to connect. We're very excited at Tgeek to finally see this product through to launch; it's been months in development, so this is a real landmark for us."

The Tgeek is available in three attractive colours: white, orange, and navy, and is available on Kickstarter under various reward tiers ranging from $49 for a single early-bird Tgeek to $135 for an early bird package of 3x Tgeek hubs. Backers will enjoy exclusive early access to this innovative product, with the company hoping to start shipping the Tgeek USB hub within just days of the campaign ending.
