An exhibition for the aviation of the future

General Aviation has always been, like Formula 1 in the automotive sector, the laboratory for the creation and development of technological advances which are then adapted and adopted by civil aviation. Many manufacturers are strengthening their focus on technology supporting greener aviation, and at this year’s event an area dedicated to electric and hybrid propulsion advancements will showcase general aviation’s contribution in this field. Sustainability will also be represented by a number of exhibitors displaying technological innovations promoting the ecological transition of the general aviation sector. “The development and incorporation of sustainable resources is a major component of the aviation sector, so we are proud to showcase the concepts originating from the GA market at the June 2021 event”, says Didier Mary, the event organiser.

Another notable presence at the show of the VELIS Electro presented for the first time by the FFA, the French Aeronautical Federation, and several innovative companies exhibiting, like Aerospace Valley, Aviathor, Smartflyer, Green Aerolease.

France Air Expo 2021 edition is also in a «hybrid format» !

In addition to Lyon's live event on June 17, 18 and 19, France Air Expo, for the first time, is hosting online visitors who will be able to view digital at www.franceairexpo.com exhibitor booths, attend conferences, and schedule one-to-one meetings to build new connections.

“There is no better time and place to accelerate a reconnection with the General Aviation community,” adds Didier Mary. “With the launch of several dozen sustainability projects in Europe recently, this new edition will also allow the industry to share, in hybrid format, innovative concepts that will support the aviation industry's future.”

The digital platform will remain open until 30th June 2021.
