"I'm honored to be included with this group of wonderful leaders, and I proudly share this recognition with the entire team that works tirelessly to realize our mission and live our values," said Ben Peterson.

"Over the past year, company leaders around the world faced unprecedented challenges to support employees during the COVID-19 crisis. Now, the employees have spoken and it's clear that these CEOs excelled and found new ways to support their people when the world of work flipped upside down," said Christian Sutherland-Wong, Glassdoor chief executive officer.

"Through a challenging year, it's inspiring to see Top CEOs who, according to their employees, adapted to change, redefined visions and led with transparency while putting the health and safety of employees first. I extend my sincerest congratulations to this year's Employees' Choice Award winners."

When employees review their employer on Glassdoor, they are asked to rate several factors tied to their experience. These include rating sentiment around their CEO's leadership as well as around senior management, as well as other factors. Specifically, when rating their CEO on Glassdoor, employees are asked to report whether they approve, disapprove of, or have no opinion about their CEO's performance.

Employees' Choice Award winners for the 2021 Top CEOs are determined using Glassdoor's proprietary algorithm, taking into account the quantity, quality and consistency of Glassdoor-approved company reviews shared by U.S.-based employees between May 2, 2020, and May 1, 2021. For reporting simplicity, CEO approval ratings are displayed as whole numbers, though calculations extend beyond the thousandth decimal place to determine final rank order.
