Cyber attacks are increasingly prominent, and new threats appear at a rapid pace. To succeed in today's market our products and processes must be designed to face those threats."

Øystein Heimark, co-founder and CTO at SalesScreen that accelerates human performance for revenue teams, today announced that it has achieved ISO 27001:2013 certification for information security best practices. This premium level security standard enables organizations to manage the security of assets such as intellectual property, employee details or information entrusted by third parties.

"Protecting the information our customers and partners share with us has always been a top priority for SalesScreen," says Øystein Heimark, co-founder and CTO at SalesScreen. "Over the last couple of years, we have experienced an increased focus on information security from our customers and society in general. Cyber attacks are increasingly prominent, and new threats appear at a rapid pace. To succeed in today's market our products and processes must be designed to face those threats. Achieving ISO certification is a major accomplishment for SalesScreen, and demonstrates our ongoing commitment to protect the information we are entrusted with."

ISO/IEC 27001 is the most widely used information security standard prepared and published by the International Organization for Standardization (ISO), the world's largest developer of voluntary international standards. It includes requirements on how to implement, monitor, maintain, and continually improve an Information Security Management System (ISMS) within the context of the organization and its business needs.

The certification recognizes that SalesScreen has designed and implemented a set of controls and measures to effectively manage risk and achieve compliance on a continual basis to protect customer information and data.
