

Moozem NFT will destroy your paintings

LONDON, ENGLAND, UNITED KINGDOM, June 21, 2021

/EINPresswire.com/ -- As digital art continues to gain popularity, people are looking to convert their physical works of art into a digital medium. Artists and collectors will have an opportunity to display their physical collections in digital form to the world in Moozem™ NFT Museums. Visit moozem.com

But why destruct?

Creating digital copies of physical items has been done for years. But it is not the copy that holds the value, same as buying a gift-shop print verses its original. Non-fungible token (NFT) has given us the ability to create unique digital artifacts and prove its authenticity. An item can be converted to a digital artifact, but its value remains in the original. Transferring the value over to the digital item is done by destroying the physical item. And what's more, art owners will be able to earn pay-per-view by displaying their works in the museums which is a truly unique concept.

You might have something as valuable as an original Monet to destroy, but NFT art can also be created from anything, be it sculptures, fine jewelry, or even hand painted sneakers.

Art destruction is quickly becoming a hot topic for discussions around the world. Some will love it and others will hate it, nonetheless the technology is here to stay.
