

Zachary Threadgill of Threadgill Financial is Profiled in a New Interview

The co-founder of Threadgill Financial sat down for a conversation about his career, his business strategies, and where he finds inspiration.

SPRING , TEXAS, UNITED STATES , June 21, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- It is with much pride and pleasure that certified financial planner and co-founder of Threadgill Financial Zachary Threadgill announces that he is the subject of a new deep-dive interview. The interview, which was conducted on behalf of an online periodical was published on May 5, 2021.

At the outset of the piece, Zachary is asked why he created his business, to which he responds, "I wanted the autonomy to make what I thought were the right decisions for my clients." He goes on to express a genuine care for the well-being of his clientele, emphasizing that it is their needs that are his primary concern, concluding that "(a)s the business owner you can decide to do something that is right for the customer, even if it is bad for the business. As an employee, you can't do that."

Further along in the interview, pressed to make suggestions for someone just starting out in the financial planning industry, Zachary Threadgill issues the following advice: "Find a good mentor, someone with good values who is successful. Go to work for them, even if it is in an administrative role, and learn the business. In a few years you'll know what you need to know well enough to do it on our own. If you choose well and prove yourself, you might not even have to leave. Many firms in my business get sold to a younger advisor."
