Fraser has hired Jim Olson as its new Chief Financial Officer (CFO). Olson is taking over for Mike Nass, who has served as Fraser CFO for the past 7½ years and is retiring. Nass's accurate observations, reporting, projections and analyses have supported Fraser's financial success, year over year.

Olson comes to Fraser from People Incorporated Mental Health Services, where he served as CFO for seven years. At People Inc., Olson managed revenue, accounting, strategic financial analysis, IT, facilities, development and central access. Before that, Olson also worked in finance, analysis and revenue for Regions Hospital, Fairview Health Services and Park Nicollet Health Services.

"I have over 25 years of finance and accounting experience, with the most recent 18 years being in healthcare finance and accounting," says Olson. "I am very excited to be part of Fraser, as it has a very strong reputation for autism and early childhood mental health services, which are areas I am very passionate about."

He lives in Mendota Heights with his spouse and 5-year-old daughter. His family loves spending time outside, and he enjoys collecting and restoring old cars.

"While it's extremely difficult to fill Mike Nass's shoes, we are lucky to have found Jim," says Diane S. Cross, Fraser
