/EINPresswire.com/ -- Eight Pound Cows — a heartwarming children's book for anyone who has loved and cared for an unusual pet

"Eight pound cows would make great pets: Great, fat, furry, black, silky, docile, pets not unlike two, eight pound, white, furry, poodles I know."

Imagine how fun it would be to have pet cows as cute and little as small dogs! Dr. Barbara ten Brink takes readers through a series of whimsical scenarios, including bathing and grooming her cows in the sink and then taking them to the professional groomers to be adorned with pretty bows in an adorable children's fantasy book titled Eight Pound Cows. This heartwarming well-penned children's tale will reaffirm and relay to readers, especially young readers, the importance of love and family as a secret to living a fulfilled life.

pets, like dogs and cats, it is natural for owners of farm animals, like horses and cows, to feel the same protective adoration. Bonded by years of care and mutual support, this love can be just as strong. Brink demonstrates this through her gentle and amusing speculation about what it would be like to share this type of relationship with her barnyard pets.” — The US Review of Books.

Dr. Barbara ten Brink bought a twenty-acre ranch-ito in Gruene, Texas (population 20) where she builds fences, hoes cactus, and runs cows. Every weekend, she feels connected to her grandmother who was also a farmer. Her granny's reputation, her larger-than-life persona, her involvement with the entire community, her enthusiasm for work, her philanthropy are models to which I aspire. Dr. Barbara imagined Clemmie, her grandmother, working on her cotton farm, harvesting mustang grapes, canning preserves, making jellies, putting up stores of black-eyed peas, okra, tomatoes, and other produce she grew on her farm and shared with all of Brownfield, Texas. Every time Dr. Barbara works at her ranch-ito, she channels Clemmie, she talks to her. She talks to her "Dear Granny, Have I done enough? Have I worked hard enough? Have I accomplished one-tenth of your humane accomplishments? I aspire to."
