NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, July 8, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- An important and rare Persian terracotta vessel is currently on display at New York's Sadigh Gallery, a leading provider of authentic antiquities from all over the world. This textured vase-shaped terracotta vessel has two handles and a scene of warriors and horse-drawn chariots in relief. This piece dates back to 500 BC, meaning that it was made during the Achaemenid Persian Empire Era.

The Achaemenid Persian Empire, 550-330 BC, (sometimes referred to as the First Persian Empire) is one of the most important and influential empires in history. Their cultural influence spread throughout most of the known world, even extending to China, where the practice of Zoroastrianism has been documented. Zoroastrianism was the state religion of the Achaemenid Empire, a religion that influenced other later religions including Judaism, Christianity, and Islam.

Sadigh Gallery, which was launched in 1978, is a family-owned art gallery situated on Manhattan's Fifth Avenue. This gallery stands out in the industry in that it guarantees its antiquities' authenticity. In fact, customers who purchase gifts from the gallery will receive lifetime certificates of authenticity with their purchases.

The art gallery has also attracted attention across the globe for delivering artifacts at wholesale prices. As a result, buyers can capitalize on competitive and affordable offers not only during the holiday season but all year long.
