Why do professionals are still up to further their studies? In a rapidly changing world, research findings indicate a strong correlation between higher education on the one hand and the competitiveness of the economy and sustainable development on the other. Among the 132 ranked full-time MBA programs reported to U.S. News & World Report for its annual MBA survey, the overall average base salary plus bonus paid to 2020 graduates was $101,034. (source: <https://wtop.com/news/2021/03/see-which-mba-programs-lead-to-the-best-return-on-investment/>). From the point of view, it is important note that the higher education system is one of the sources of the competitive position of an economy. The level of competitiveness of the economy, on the other hand, significantly determines the sustainable level of prosperity achieved by an economy.
