Technological advancements are shaping the fans and blowers market.

Companies manufacturing fans and blowers have introduced technologies such as liquid cooling technology for better performance. For instance, in September 2020, Boyd Corporation, a US-based company, designed a low-profile cooling ultra-thin and lightweight blower using liquid cooling technology. These are as thin as 3mm which functions well in high pressure and provides cooling while maintaining the durability and are designed in thin and ultra-thin profiles which are ideal for the smaller, more powerful devices.

The main types of fans and blowers are centrifugal fans and blowers, axial fans and blowers, and others. Centrifugal fans and centrifugal blowers are air-moving pumps or motors, used for moving air through a duct. Axial fans and blowers are used as a propeller to draw the air into the fan and discharge it in the parallel axial direction. An axial fan forces the extracted air to move parallel to the shaft around which the blades rotate. The fans and blowers are used in various sectors including industrial, commercial, and others.

The fans and blowers market consists of sales of fans and blowers by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that are used to overcome the airflow resistance caused by components such as ducts and dampers. Fans and blowers are machines that provide ventilation, the flow of air (or gas) required for cooling, exhausting, and conveying, and are also used in industrial process requirements.
