Teague Egan's business background is one of serial entrepreneurship, investing, inventing, and philanthropy. He has been investing in public sector energy assets and sustainable technologies since 2013. Prior to EnergyX, he previously started businesses in entertainment, music, and sports, and is also the inventor of energyDNA – a patented multi-component graphene textile fiber technology.

Teague founded Innovation Factory VC, a VC fund focused on tech, life sciences, real estate, and consumer products in 2012.

Most of his philanthropic efforts are associated with the Thomas E. Smith Foundation. He is the co-founder of Dance For Paralysis, The Reality Ride Challenge, and The Kindness Project.

EnergyX was conceived when Teague Egan was on a sabbatical exploring South America. As he ventured across the Salar de Uyuni, in the mountains of Bolivia, he came to learn this area was not only the world's largest salt flat at 4000 square miles, but also the world's single largest lithium reserve held in the salt brines below. Part of a larger area known as the "Lithium Triangle", up to 75% of the entire world's lithium is captured in this small area between Chile, Argentina and Bolivia. Primarily untapped, and with the biggest opportunity Teague had ever set his eyes on, EnergyX was born. EnergyX drives innovation by partnering with the world's leading research facilities, laboratories, universities, and commercial manufacturers to bring disruptive technologies to the market at scale.
