ALEXANDRIA, VA, UNITED STATES, August 23, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Grey Matter identified as an Industry Outperformer in GigaOm's Recent Radar Report for Evaluating Service Mesh

Gigaom, the platform democratizing access to strategic and functional engineering-led research, has identified Grey Matter as an Industry Outperformer in its 2021 Radar Report for Evaluating Service Mesh!

Authored by analysts Ivan McPhee and Chris Grundemann, the August 20, 2021, published report provides an in-depth review of the major players making up the service mesh technology landscape, highlighting their pros and cons, measured against key criteria such as technical feature sets, market position, and business impact. Grey Matter is one of only three capabilities to receive the Industry Outperformer distinction.

The platform also received 14 call-outs for Exceptional focus and execution across a number of key criteria, only two other capabilities received as many.

GigaOm analysis scored Grey Matter as Exceptional for its outstanding focus and execution for its Large Enterprise positioning, and its single or multiple networks & single or multiple control plane deployment models. Grey Matter was further cited as Exceptional for its platform, configurability, extensibility, monitoring & observability, and security models. The platform also received Exceptional marks for its overall body of features, its mesh management, ecosystem, and support models. Finally, Grey Matter received marks of Exceptional for its service discovery and encryption capabilities.

GigaOm goes on to cite Grey Matter as an “enterprise-proven universal service mesh networking platform offering zero-trust security, exceptional Layer 3, 4, and 7 visibility, unmatched business intelligence, and automated performance optimization.” The platform’s mesh enabled AI contextual awareness and analytics capabilities are also highlighted as offering “significant benefits over existing open-source service meshes.”
