

Joseph Gellene Launches Online Consultancy Services in Response to COVID-19

HOBOKEN, NEW JERSEY, UNITED STATES, August 27, 2021 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Joseph Gellene is proud to announce that he has started offering his services virtually. The renowned intuitive guide has announced that anyone in need of his psychic services can now do so via zoom or Skype.

The move is necessitated by the COVID-19 pandemic, and the effect it has on society. One of Joseph's modes of operation is getting people together, letting them share stories, and getting ideas on how to improve their future. This approach may not work in these times of the pandemic, given that such meetings could end up being spreading grounds for the virus.

While the virus has made it impossible to have the gatherings that he used to share insights with clients, the issues that brought them to him have not gone away. People seek Gellene's help because they need to change their lives for the better or are uncertain with their life direction. These issues have only increased since COVID-19 started, and the resultant problems such as death and lockdowns. Millions of people no longer have jobs, have debts to pay, and are unsure of tomorrow. Many others have underlying conditions that make them vulnerable and are uncertain of what would happen to them if the virus hits them. All these uncertainties need answers, and if none are available, people can easily fall into depression, and in the worst-case scenario, develop suicidal thoughts. Such extreme reactions to the pandemic have motivated Gellene to start offering his services virtually.

By taking this approach, he hopes to achieve two goals. The first one is to give his clients a chance to share their experiences. Just like they do when he puts them together in physical groups, Joseph believes that people can get to know that they are not alone in the struggle with the virtual meetups. When someone who feels like the world is crashing around them comes across many others who are suffering the same way, it can be a source of strength. Others are also likely to draw inspiration from the fact that there are people out there suffering more than them. He also hopes that through such sessions, people can share ideas and form relationships that can help them navigate the future much better, no matter how tough it may be.

On top of that, he hopes to use such virtual meetings to offer psychic predictions and have clients deal with such predictions as a group. Gellene knows that when someone is hit with information that their future is not so bright, it can affect them psychologically. However, when there is support from a group, it can lighten the burden. Besides, Gellene believes that no future is cast in stone. He makes this known to his clients and helps them share ideas that can uplift everyone and change their fortunes. For instance, if someone in the group is about to lose a job, the group can leverage their networks to help such a member secure a job fast.

Through his online platform, he also hopes to help people who need personalized help. He understands that many people may not have someone to share their fears and anxieties with or are in complicated situations that cannot be shared with just anyone. To help such people, he will be scheduling secure zoom calls with them. He wants to offer a listening ear online while at the same time giving hints that can help them change the direction of the future.

For convenience, the individual clients will have to book their sessions at least two days in advance. This will help Gellene plan for each of them and avoid a scenario where clients have conflicting schedules. The group clients are free to schedule their appointments at least 6-hours before a session.

As an introductory offer for the virtual services, Gellene will offer each individual client one week of free consultancy and two weeks for groups and corporate clients. The free service is meant to familiarize clients with the service while also allowing them to give feedback on areas of improvement. For instance, if there are issues with the video quality, he already has a team ready to handle it, among other technical aspects of the program.

Since he announced the launch of the virtual consultancy services, Gellene has attracted lots of interested clients. Many of them are happy that he is offering an avenue to figure out the future and share whatever burdens they have. Corporations, too, are taking up the group packages. Many of them want to use his package to let their employees bond and ease the pandemic's pressure.

Going forward, Gellene hopes to combine the virtual sessions with the physical meetups. He intends to do this once a critical mass of the population has been vaccinated. His idea to combine the two is informed by the fact that physical, social interactions are not going away any time soon. At the same time, the adoption of virtual video communication technologies is only going to accelerate even post-pandemic. Therefore, it is prudent to incorporate both and give customers the best services possible.

Joseph Gellene is an intuitive guide and uses his gift to help people rediscover themselves and find direction in life. Through his services, people going through anxiety and other issues find clarity and peace.
