Victor Issa is a Lebanese-American, first-generation immigrant, and one of the most talented and well-known sculptors in the United States. He has been sculpting professionally for over 30 years, and his pieces of art are displayed worldwide. Issa has proven he has a true gift for capturing and creating incredible liveliness from hard metal from religious figures, celebrities, children, and angels.

Issa's career first really took off when he moved to Colorado 33 years ago. Along with other activities, Issa co-founded the Loveland Sculpture Invitational show, the largest sculpture show in the country. The event attracted thousands of art enthusiasts and collectors from all over the world during its twenty-three year run. Issa also owns the Victor Issa Studios and Living Bronze Gallery in Estes Park, where he creates and exhibits his bronze work. Issa moved to Southern California in February of 2021. Issa's work has been shown at prestigious galleries throughout Southern and Northern CA, and currently has more than 12 life-size and larger-than-life bronze compositions on display in public places throughout the region.

Issa defines a fine art sculpture in his blog as "an uncompromising and unrelenting pursuit of truth and beauty" (Issa). Issa has consistently created works of art that portray something meaningful, thought-provoking, and uplifting. For example, one of his incredible sculptures, "Power of Thought," illustrates the depths of the human journey and the influential roles humans can play in society. His devotion and passion for creating sculptures that depict truth and beauty are undeniable.
