-- There are some things that are beyond human comprehension; things that cannot be explained by science or the vast knowledge we currently have available. We constantly court the possibility that there are things greater than us—be it religion, the arcane, or the otherworldly. We have little that can explain some phenomenon and there are times when these are interesting fascinations. It is when the weird and unexplainable harm our way of life that we are forced to ask the hard questions. When Happy Harrow encounters one mysterious death after the other in "Vampire Murders in Morocco," she is thrust into a search for answers.

Beatrice Fairbanks Cayzer lives a pretty straightforward life free of intrigue and mysterious occurrences. She founded the Cayzer Museum for Children in line with her ancestor's tradition of fostering growth in communities. As her family did before her back in 1620 when they founded the settlements of Upper Virginia, Cayzer helped people thrive by providing them with a place to pursue knowledge and wonder at a young age. She then turned to writing novels with characters who delve into the wondrous and the mysterious. Her stories have been critically acclaimed and have done well commercially. Cayzer has met with sellout success in 2016 and 2018 with The Secret Diary of Mrs. John Quincy Adams and New Tales of Palm Beach

"Vampire Murders in Morocco" takes place across several cities. It follows Happy Harrow, a horse racer who works as a freelance detective, and her quest to track down the person responsible for mysterious murders. Her family receives a seemingly innocent all-expenses-paid trip to Morocco on the condition that they bring along their sponsor's niece. Things take a turn for the weird when Priscilla bares her more provocative side. As if this wasn't trouble for them enough, a teenage girl is murdered at their hotel with seemingly vampiric bite marks on her neck.

Can Happy Harrow track down this mysterious vampire? Will she be able to stop the gruesome killings? Find out in Vampire Murders in Morocco.
