"When I wrote "Merryflat Waltz" I was living alone in a small house near a place called Merryflat Saskatchewan. Merryflat isn't a town, or a village, or even a hamlet. Merryflat is one old schoolhouse surrounded by generational ranches. Being as it's in the middle of nowhere, community is an important aspect of life. Whether it was at a branding, or a rodeo, or the Christmas concert at Merryflat School, it is generally the same crowd that gathers. This crowd is made up of many characters, all of which I learned I could count on during my time living there. The "Merryflat Waltz" is a tip of the hat to those people who have supported me along the way and accepted me into their community. It's a community that's always good for a few stories and a lot of laughs," says Don Kinahan.

West of The Fourth is a band that seeks to span both traditional and contemporary themes through their music. Their songs are compelling and passionate, filled with interesting stories told from the saddle, along with heartfelt tales that truly exemplify just what it means to be a cowboy. With a sound that bridges the gap between contemporary country music, country waltzes, and country rock, West of The Fourth brings a unique and interesting sound to listeners from all around North America.
